Cox temporarily shutdown my internet connection due to a DMCA notice (self.Piracy)

submitted 2 months ago * by DisRuptive1

I had received emails from them in the past but today they shut my connection off (sort of). When I tried going to a website, I was taken to a different one which said to remove an infringing file and then click a link to reactivate my subscription. After clicking the link, I got this message, my modem reset and I was able to get back online.

Wondering if Cox's solution to the party claiming DMCA violation is to get you to change your IP by resetting your modem. Is an IP identification also limited to a specific time?

They know what IP a customer has at said time. Otherwise there would be false positives constantly.

Yeh... and they use DNS hijacking too, right?

What this means is that you are probably on strike 7 if that is the first time they did that. I hit strike 10 yesterday, which meant I HAD to call in to reactivate. Pretty simple old

- About /r/Piracy:
- This is a sub for all things piracy related.
 - Although primarily about file-sharing, articles about ethical issues on "unauthorized" distribution, legal changes and challenges and so on are all welcome.
 - Other topics fitting include actual real life or historical piracy, and events relating to the Pirate parties.
 - Do not ask for or link to pirated content.

man rouse and the guy was feeling really sorry for me. What is a wireless password, how do I set that up sort of shit, really my neighbors could be using my internet, etc. No worries though cox is pretty chill-ish.

Cancel cox and go with a different ISP that values your privacy... if you have any other choice.

Usually where the big swinging cox resides, there isnt competition on their level.
